"It's been really incredible to see all of our various talents coming together for common purpose," Edwards said.

John Soriano added that the response has been overwhelmingly positive so far, with support from the cities of Rapid City and Spearfish, both cities' police departments, and local businesses.

"We're so thankful to be able to do this as a family, and that we've had such great support from the Black Hills communities so far," Soriano said. "We look forward to continue making great relationships."
